DPT Laboratories follows Legiant's Prescription for Payroll Pain

DPT Laboratories, Ltd., a full-service developer, manufacturer and packager of prescription, over-the-counter, and biotech products, had a manual Time and Attendance process, but with 500 hourly employees this was no easy task. In order to complete payroll, the timesheets had to be faxed or delivered from six locations and required two full time employees just to process time sheets, without any guaranteed accuracy. A recurring issue was that they would frequently have employees claim overtime that could not be confirmed.

In early 2000, DPT's research into Time and Attendance systems lead them to Legiant. After reviewing various vendors, DPT selected Legiant as their vendor and partner because they knew the Legiant Timecard system would provide accuracy and room for company growth.

Andy Miller, project manager for DPT explains, "Legiant staff was very proactive by anticipating any roadblocks we may have encountered. In addition, the training materials were exemplary and made the transition as seamless as possible." "The training program made it easy for our employees to get a feel for how the program works", said Phil Geisler, Director of Information Management "and was extremely user friendly – a huge selling point for DPT".

Benefits

Although DPT knew automating through Legiant would reform their process, the implementation also resulted in savings that they were not able to predict - $30,000 annually. Three years after program implementation, savings are still being seen in the areas of time to process payroll, reduced overtime, and increased accuracy. Instead of two employees spending two days to complete payroll, it now requires one person for a matter of hours. "The automated system has allowed a uniform and fair application of policies throughout the network", says

Keith Fugere, Cost Accountant, "and has paid for itself many times over."

Most importantly, the system has enabled employees to be self sufficient in that employees will have their own kiosks and will be able to access their personal information without having to go through a supervisor.

DPT was additionally sold on the fact that software updates and installation can be done through the server. By using a web-based application, the Information Management staff does not have to perform software installations, updates, or maintenance on over 230 computer workstations, as they would need to with a Client Server application.
